I. O. H. P. Stifficks, who has for some time past been driving a produce wagon for T. H. Ruggles, has "folded his tent and silently stole away." Before going, however, he as silently appropriated ten cases of eggs entrusted to his care to deliver at the wharfoat at Maysville and sold them to parties in that place, pocketed the proceeds and left for Indiana where his father resides. Mr. Ruggles immediately wrote to Stifficks's father and to the Postmaster at the Indiana town where Isaac Oliver lived to. On Saturday evening he received letters, one from the Postmaster notifying him of Stifficks's arrival in Indiana, one from the elder Stifficks, enclosing some $43 in payment for the eggs and one from truant Isaac O. saying that he had learned of his writing to the Postmaster and wanted him to hush the matter up, and that "you oughter not treated me in that way," winding up in a P. S. with "you're a pretty Christian, ain't you?" "Rug" naturally feels good on getting pay for the eggs.

ASKING TOO MUCH.

A Sacrifice That Was Too Great to Be Borne.

The momentous question had been propounded, says the Detroit Tribune. Large pearls tears, clinging to her drooping eyelashes and her bosom heaved with emotion, just as tears have clung and bosoms have heaved under similar circumstances since the days of the cave-dwellers. He held her hand clasped to his vest. "I know I am poor," the youthful suppliant faltered. A glorious courage invested her being. She raised her eyes: "Mr.—Mr.—Alfred!" It was her answer; a single word, eloquent with unutterable trust. "Alfred!" "My life!" "I—I am not afraid of poverty," he folded her to his bosom, fairly intoxicated with joy. "With you I would live in a log cabin," she declared. A look of pain flitted across his face and he was fain to bow his head to hide his emotion. "I ask of you a greater sacrifice than that," he sighed. The girl of a moment ago was transfused into a woman now. "Do you want me," she eagerly cried, "to go west and live in a turf dugout?" He wept and the tears fell like rain. "Worse than that," he moaned. The brave lady blanched and a piteous expression of terror took possession of her face. "Alfred!" He could only sob. "Do you ask me—" She had to stop and shudder awhile. "Do you ask me to live—to live in a flat with modern conveniences?" His silence was his acquiescence and his doom. Pale, but dignified, she braced him. "I must bid you good night," she softly remarked. Mechanically he moved toward the door. "You need not call again, sir." And so they were not married.

LEARNED OPINIONS.

Judging a Patient's Condition by False Eyes and Teeth.

Dr. Brunton, in an address lately reported in the London Lancet, was cautioning his hearers—the members of the medical society—against hastily expressed opinions as to the nature of patients' diseases, and emphasized his warning by two professional anecdotes. He was once present at a clinic, the subject of which was a man evidently suffering from some disease of the heart.

An unnatural murmuring sound could be heard from that organ, and the pupil of one of his eyes was very much dilated. The peculiar appearance of the eye seemed to have some connection with the cardiac affection, but various opinions were expressed by the different students as to what the precise nature of this relation could be.

The discussion was just becoming interesting when the patient remarked that this strange-looking eye was made of glass!

At another clinic the professor in charge was discussing learnedly about the importance attending to minor symptoms.

"Now, gentlemen," he said, "in the case of this woman here, certain things could be confidently affirmed from the condition of her teeth."

He was proceeding to particularize, but just then the patient broke in upon him.

"Please, sir," she said, as she took out her teeth, "I will hand them around; the young gentlemen might like to look at them closer."

The Grip in 1863.

According to the following extract, published in the London Truth, from an old historical work, not only was Edinburgh afflicted with the influenza in 1863, but the queen of Scots herself had the disease: "In November Edinburgh was visited with a 'new disease' called the 'new acquaintance,' which passed through the whole court, neither sparing lords, ladies nor damoyseils. Yt ys a paine in their heads that have yt, and a soreness in their stomacks with a greave coughes. The queene kepte her bedde vii. dayes. Ther was no appearance of danger, nor manie that died of the dysence, except some olde folks."

THE state of Kentucky raised $16,000,000 more pounds of tobacco in 1891 than she did in 1890. Nicholas raised in 1890, 3,537,000; in 1891, 3,130,450; Fleming in 1890, 3,080,997; in 1891, 3,427,312; Robertson in 1890, 1,268,000; in 1891, only $1,239,000.

On and after July 1st, paid locals will be inserted in THE LEDGER at 25 cents per line for each insertion.

THE fact is remarkable, but nevertheless true, that without special effort and no advertising, the Maysville Sanitarium is meeting with the greatest success. After three or four days' treatment the veriest lover of Bourbon loses his appetite and taste for the beverage. No patient yet has been able to withstand longer than three days the great influence of the treatment given at the Institute.
